Zscaler — Recruitment

Re: Solutions Consultant — Remote, Spain

Tilburg, 15 September 2026

I am a native Spanish speaker who works in English every day, and two platforms on my portfolio are mine end to end — design, build, tests, deploy. The part of that work I want more of is the customer conversation, not the commit. The specific reason it is Zscaler: your pitch is replacing the VPN rather than hardening the perimeter, which makes the sale an architecture argument, and architecture arguments are the part of my own work I am best at.

Agentic tooling is how I deliver. I designed, directed and tested Citania on my own — a multi-tenant booking platform on PostgreSQL with 294 automated tests, pre-launch — and Alpha Scout, a live football player-valuation platform that runs from scraping and entity resolution through to calibrated probabilities. Both are at franciscorau.com. Before those, a year as Data & Process Analyst at a Dutch contact-centre company, where the closest thing to your job was sitting with the operations team until a vague question became a definition precise enough to build on. I want that same conversation with someone outside the building.

On networking: HTTP, DNS and TLS I know operationally, from standing up and debugging my own multi-tenant system in production rather than from a course. The deeper protocol layer is where I would be starting from the operator's view rather than the certificate.

One habit, concretely. On Alpha Scout I audited my own backtest and found a stale price in a denominator and a date leak. I had published that my flagged players were sold at a 3.48x median multiple against 2.80x for the comparable pool; measured against the corrected price it is 1.17x against 1.08x, which is noise. I replaced the headline with the smaller true one and re-published. On right to work, since the form asks: I am Argentine with Dutch residence, and the Dutch immigration service has confirmed I meet the conditions for citizenship and put me forward for it, with the ceremony expected in the coming months. From that point I am an EU citizen with an unrestricted right to work across the Union, Spain included. Today I would need sponsorship there, and I have answered the form that way rather than leave you to find out. Available immediately.
