Application — Process Excellence Consultant, Onsite Journey Excellence (Utrecht)

Tilburg, 10 August 2026

Your ad describes a procesarcheoloog: someone who digs into messy processes because you can only improve what you truly understand, and who redesigns them so AI agents can finally do in production what they promise in the pitch. That is the precise shape of my last year. At a Dutch contact centre the operational truth lived in two disconnected systems with incompatible logs; before any improvement was possible I had to excavate and reconcile them into one picture the business could trust. Only then came the redesign: automation and AI tooling that actually ran daily — forecasting, performance analytics, real-time operations — adopted by the floor because I built it around how they really worked, not how the process document said they worked.

I fit your wereldreiziger test too: my days moved between operators who wanted targets met, engineers behind the telephony systems, and a founder who wanted the business case — and I am AI-native in the practical sense: agentic AI is my delivery method, including a full SaaS product I built and shipped alone. Pionier: both of those things I started before anyone asked, in environments with no framework to lean on. Honest note on language: my Dutch is A2 and actively improving — I read your ad without help, and working in English is seamless while it catches up.

On work authorization: I hold a kennismigrant permit and bol.com B.V. is an IND-recognised sponsor, so hiring me requires only a free notification — no visa procedure. Everything I claim is live and clickable at franciscorau.com. I would love to show you how I work through a messy process.
